Twenty-four Hours in Zion

Twenty-four hours is all too brief for even a glimpse at the many points of scenic and historic interest in and about Salt Lake City; yet, if the time is well employed, the stranger can see those of chief importance, and thus carry away some pleasing, clearly defined memories, not soon to be forgotten.

Naturally, his first interest centers around the historic spots which mark the era when Utah was almost an unknown name and the people who created the great commonwealth in the far-away mountain fastness.

Everybody wants a peep "Over the Garden Wall" which encloses the "Temple Square," adorned by the three main edifices of the Latter Day Saints, whose peculiar architecture is known far and wide. The Temple, which holds so much of mystery to those outside of the church organization, whose "Holy of Holies" has never been desecrated by foot of "unbeliever;" the "Tabernacle," with its great oval roof, whose arch spans a vast auditorium without a support, seating 10,000 people, where each Sabbath the followers of Joseph Smith and Brigham Young tax the seating capacity to the utmost limit, and on other days the mellow strains of the marvelous organ charm the ear; last, the "Assembly Hall," a massive stone structure of less pretension, devoted to the deliberations of the church potentates, the "Seventies" and kindred ruling bodies. Around the buildings in this ten-acre tract the grounds are finely parked;

a statue of Brigham Young stands in the shadow of the Temple which he designed and laid the corner stone. The entire square, or "block," in the Utonian vernacular, is surrounded by a fourteen-foot wall of adobe, sun-dried bricks, about two and a half feet thick, on a stone foundation three feet above the sidewalk, having four immense gates, one in the center of each side. An electric car can conveniently be taken for Fort Douglas, three miles distant, at the foot of the Wasatch Mountains, where is stationed a full regiment of United States troops. The "Seeing Salt Lake City" Observation Car makes daily trips to all points of interest with a courteous guide entertainingly explaining the sights from which you get a grand view of the Salt Lake Valley stretching to the south, the calm surface of America's great inland sea gleaming in the sun fourteen miles to the west, the broad expanse on either side of the Jordan River framed in by the Wasatch and Oquirrh mountains forms one of nature's pictures impossible to duplicate. Travelers concede that no place from ocean to ocean compares with Salt Lake for a summer vacation. Never too hot nor too cold; on one side the great inland life-restoring sea, and on the other jagged mountains, sparkling with stores of ever-melting yet never-melting snow, temper the atmosphere to a nicety. No exception can be taken to the verdict which decrees Zion to be "The Promised Land."

MORMON TEMPLE, SALT LAKE CITY.
